What's New In Adobe Photoshop 2022 (Version 23.2)?

The invention relates to a device for extracting water from a mixture of water and non-water constituents, such as soft tissue, comprising a filter element, inside which there are arranged a number of filter bags, permeable to water, while being impermeable to most of the non-water constituents in the mixture. A device according to the said preamble is disclosed in FR-A 25 23 638. The filter element is an extruded tubular structure, which in its upper section is provided with an orifice for the passage of the mixture to be processed. The filter element itself is provided with several U-shaped grooves, which extend from the upper section in a circumferential direction. Inside the said grooves there are arranged the filter bags, which are opened out in a radial direction. A radial flow will then occur inside the grooves, from the outer section, from where the mixture enters, to the inner section, in the vicinity of the orifice. The filter bags which are closest to the orifice are supplied with water and non-water constituents must thus enter the filter bags, which is not very effective. On the other hand, if the filter bags are not supplied with water and the mixture enters the remaining filter bags through a wide passage, it is possible that water will flow from the outside through the remaining filter bags towards the orifice, from where it is again discharged from the filter element. The object of the invention is to solve the problem mentioned above and to provide a solution which is less sensitive towards the fluctuations in the process parameters. This problem is solved by dividing the filter element in the circumferential direction and introducing the mixture to be processed through openings at the upper ends of the filter bags. The annular openings will be located in a radial area with respect to the inner part of the flow and open towards the same surface. By arranging the openings in a plurality of locations arranged in a spiral on the circumference of the filter element, it will be possible to find a compromise between the requirements which must be complied with at different stages of the process. For instance, in the stage where the filter bags have a great capacity, there is a need to feed the filter bag from the outside via the opening, when in the stage where the filter bags are supplied with water from the outside via the opening, a great resistance is encountered. An advantage of the invention is that the filter bags can be arranged without problems inside the grooves between the tubular section and the surrounding area. This
