I currently have a "hammer" fall effect (default android rotate fall animation). How do I go about implementing this into my code. The hammer already moves with the phone so i need to make a timer just for the hammer to fall. I have made the swing layout but the animation only lasts for 1 second so i cannot use it. Any ideas? A: No. There is no way of doing this. You'll have to mimic the hammering action in real-time. As you already have a rotation in place, it would be a very simple task to simulate a hammer. Or, since you do only need to get the hammering going on its own, you could use a smooth rotation rather than a hammer, and fake a hammering effect. London, Sept. 1, 2016 MSNBC, the television news network, doesn't waste time. And if the network wants to make the point that Hillary Clinton's email handling was potentially illegal, fine, show it. On Monday, the channel aired "Breaking With Protocol" — a documentary investigating the former secretary of state's handling of confidential government information. Among the many bits of information in the 10-minute documentary: Clinton was using an unsecure email address. The State Department's director of information programs noted in 2012 that clintonemail.com had a "misconfigured web server that appears to have been set up by the Clintons." Clinton used a private email server while she was secretary of state. The former secretary of state wasn't the first U.S. official to use a private server. Dozens of others did so before her. Clinton used a BleachBit software on the server. Clinton deleted some emails and set up a system to recover them after her use of a personal email server was discovered. On Monday, Clinton spokesman Nick Merrill said the problems with the network's documentary were simply that "it's boring and is fairly accurate." Merrill also said the network has a "disproportionate number of Clinton stories." "The record speaks for itself," Merrill told FoxNews.com. "This wasn't a government issue in Giant cell tumors of bone are treated with total or near-total resection. Theoretical advantages of particle bracing have been reported for tumors not involving the epiphysis or distal femur. The purpose of this article is to present two cases of giant cell tumors of the distal femur. One was complicated by secondary displacement and the other by superficial infection. The first patient was treated with open reduction, internal fixation with a gamma3/gamma1 polyethylene terephthalate (PET) implant, and adjuvant radiotherapy. The second patient was treated with gamma3/gamma1 PET implant alone with adjuvant radiotherapy. No recurrences were noted after 2 years for either case.Saturday, March 27, 2007 Rather It is The Leftist When I hear how left-wing I am, there are two responses that might strike a chord. 1) "So that explains why you are a socialist!"2) "I thought you were right-wing." The first of these is really just trying to discredit me, but let's take it seriously. If you want to talk about left-wing, here's a list of the things I am going to advocate: 1) I'm anti-capitalism. The only system that is rational, sustainable and humane is one that has no private ownership of capital and places the means of production in the hands of the community.2) I am against the death penalty.3) I want to disarm America. 4) I want to have rights for homosexuals, 3) I want to have rights for immigrants, 4) I want a living wage, 5) I want privacy. Does this make me left-wing? It certainly doesn't make me right-wing. The US government is already left wing. The capitalist system under which we live is an abject failure. Capitalism causes and is caused by poverty and war. It has created an exploitative, unjust and oppressive system where the rich have more while the poor have less and the global environment is being destroyed at an ever increasing rate. We should take down the system that has caused all these problems. If we can replace it with a better system that does not cause more problems we should do that. 3da54e8ca3
