Modifications to a commonly used agglutination assay, which detects heat-labile enterotoxin (LT) in stools of children with diarrhea, were evaluated. First, LT from Escherichia coli O91:14, serotype O91:H21, was purified and serially diluted. The purified LT agglutinated conidia of a previously developed strain, NCPF 4610, producing characteristic colonies on the surface of a blood agar plate after incubation at 38 C for 48 h. A second-generation assay was evaluated for sensitivity, specificity, and selectivity of the LTB. As compared with an antiserum ELISA technique, agglutination titers from LT-positive and LT-
