That's where this handy new app can help. It's called TimeSpaper, and it's a simple but nifty way to curate your photos and videos in one place and to organise them chronologically for easy viewing. TimeSpaper works by analysing your phone's internal time. For the photos it looks at the time they were taken (and you're not charged for that), and the app organises them in chronological order on the app's home screen. The app computes the timestamp for the video clips, too, so they'll appear on the home screen as well. But to get you started you can manually select a bunch of photos for TimeSpaper to organise. And you can then set up TimeSpaper to organise any number of photos and videos you've saved on your phone. To give you an example, we stuck with a set of photos we've been taking as we're out on our lunchbreak. First we selected some photos to analyse. TimeSpaper then
