We report eight imported cases of cutaneous leishmaniasis (CL) in Haiti. This work was realized with two purposes: 1. To know the epidemiology of CL in the Department of Haiti. 2. To show how to use the diagnosis of CL for epidemiological purposes. From January 1990 to April 1993, 78 cases of CL were diagnosed in the laboratory department, 57 of them (73%) were from the Department of Haiti. In the latter, eight cases (14%) were confirmed by culture and six (10%) by PCR. These cases were described according to the sex, age group, place of residence and occupation of the patients and their means of arrival in the Departments of Haiti. The diagnosis of CL was made by direct examination and culture of lesion biopsies in 78% of cases, but only in 14% (two cases) of them using parasitological exams (parasites, Leishmania species, antibodies). Clinical and/or parasitological exams were possible in only 36% of cases. Lesions were located in the face and the hands and arms in the majority of f30f4ceada
