Progressive Conservative leader Doug Ford says his plan to introduce a climate change plan is similar to the Green Party's plan that he dismissed. Ford's plan does not include any timelines, but promises to seek input from farmers and communities. "We are going to do the work, we are going to put our ideas out there," Ford said Thursday. "We are going to bring forward a plan that will start putting money back into the pockets of farmers." Ontario's Green Party also unveiled its climate plan Thursday, which targets a 20 per cent reduction in greenhouse gas emissions by 2030. The plan's key component is an increase in the minimum price of carbon to $10 a tonne by 2022, with the price rising each year. Under the plan, the price would go to $15 a tonne by 2025. The Greens also say they would reduce the amount of energy used to power air conditioners in the province and eliminate natural gas fracking. Ford and his PC party released their climate change plans in response to Premier Kathleen Wynne's throne speech. The PC plan promises to reduce greenhouse gas emissions by 30 per cent below 1990 levels by 2030. The party has pledged to spend $1 billion to support farmers, but has not provided any other details. Ford said the money will be spent on the Climate Change Action Fund, which was created by the Liberals. "What we are going to do with the money we have spent from the Climate Change Action Fund is we are going to put it right back into the pockets of the people," Ford said. The party also said they are looking for input from people across the province to help make their plan. "We will be listening to people that are affected in every community across Ontario," Ford said. "We are going to make sure that we are putting ideas forward." Ford's climate plan is similar to the Green Party's, but he says he is spending his own money and it doesn't
