A mentally ill young woman has been sentenced to life in prison for stabbing her mother to death last year. Tamara Marie Watts, 24, pleaded guilty to second-degree murder in her mother's death on Friday, two days after her trial was set to begin. Watts told the court she remembered hearing her mother crying for help on the day of the stabbing, but she said she couldn't remember why. Watts' attorney, Greg Newbury, said he expected her to be sentenced to prison. He said her family hasn't received justice. "This whole situation is just so tragic and I can only imagine her suffering as this has unfolded. I'm sorry that she has to go through this," Newbury said. "She's an innocent victim of her own mental illness." Watts was a patient of Dr. Heather Bresette's at the Wisconsin Statewide Services for Mental Health unit of the Milwaukee County Jail. In her office, Bresette said, Watts told her that she didn't remember the killing. "I don't know why she would do this. She has some history of mental illness and self-mutilation," Bresette said. When she
