Because spending time on RSI can result in serious health problems, it is important to work at preventing them. The idea of RSI prevention is to decrease the possibility of the hand developing a problem.

1. Position, Grip, and Reach No matter what kind of work you do, it's important to make sure that your hand is in the correct position at all times. This means you should always hold your mouse with the same grip and reach it with your arm on the side that you prefer. This will help prevent RSI. If you regularly need to change hands, make sure to move your mouse to the hand that's going to be using it, and move it back to its normal position.
2. Prolonged Exposure to Infrared Light When we're using computers and other devices that use infrared light to transmit information, the infrared light can cause our retinas to become fatigued and become more sensitive to this type of light. It's also important to make sure that our eyes are not directly over the light source.
3. Keep a Clean Work Space While it may seem obvious, it's important to clean your desk, monitor, keyboard, mouse, and computer at least once a day. Wiping any type of surface or cleaning it with an all-purpose cleaner will help prevent the development of RSI. 4. Proper Chair Design A poor chair design can cause the back to be very narrow. This will force the user's arms to bend, which causes strain on the wrists. This strain is especially important when you're using a computer for an extended period of time, so to prevent this strain it's important to design your chair so that it will not cause your neck to be in an unnatural position. 5. Proper Sitting Posture If you're seated for a long period of time, it's important to make sure that your posture is correct. This means you should be sitting at a 90-degree angle to the floor and slightly lower than your knees, not sitting down at a 90-degree angle and at an angle where the back is in a straight line with your shoulders
