whether the CHADS2 score, which mainly relies on the presence of comorbidities, is able to predict clinical outcome in these patients. Prospective cohort study of 142 consecutive patients with paroxysmal AF undergoing first ablation procedure. Exclusion criteria were: chronic AF, history of AF ablation and permanent electrical cardiac pacing. Demographic data, cardiovascular risk factors, symptoms and CHADS2 score were collected at baseline. The composite endpoint was defined as: stroke, death or hospitalization for heart failure. During a median follow up of 19.1 months, 103 patients (71.5%) reached the composite endpoint. The composite endpoint rate was 66.6% in patients with CHADS2 score >0 (29 of 44 patients) compared to 45.4% in patients with CHADS2 score ≤0 (73 of 156 patients) (P=0.010). According to receiver operating characteristic curves, CHADS2 score 0.703 predicted the composite endpoint (P
