Get the complete drama for a.Q: Putc fails to print \r and character in C the code below prints a strange character with no newline and only the \r character is printed: #include #include #include int main() { int fd = open("./file.bin", O_RDWR, S_IRUSR | S_IWUSR); if (fd == -1) { perror("Unable to open file"); return 1; } putc('\r', fd); putc(' ', fd); return 0; } How to get \r and printed as in Unix? A: In addition to what @CharlieChen has said, there is a problem with your code because putc(c, fd) will always print as a newline, even if c is a character other than newline. When you open a file for binary reading (O_RDWR), the file will be opened in text mode and when you print c, it will print as a newline (unless c is a control character such as newline). C99 §7.21.3.2 - p15: For a successful call, the file shall be open. Binary files are never open for text read; they are open for binary read (and write on some systems; that's not relevant here). To change text mode, call fcntl(fd, F_SETFL, O_NONBLOCK);. That is, #include #include #include f30f4ceada
