File.1. Field of the Invention The present invention relates generally to electrical cable connectors and more particularly to an electrical connector that cooperates with a panel mounted push-back release. 2. Related Art In an electronic equipment enclosure, typically, several circuit boards are housed and supported within a suitable housing. Connectors and cables interconnect the various electrical circuits on the circuit boards to provide the various electrical signals necessary to operate the enclosed electronic equipment. The connectors are typically mounted to the circuit boards in a back plane or in an exterior face of the equipment housing. The connectors are often structured to be removable such that the cable connectors can be removed from the circuit board for maintenance and/or replacement purposes. Further, connectors may be removable to permit access to the enclosed equipment for purposes of security and/or maintenance purposes. Various types of connectors are used in the electronics industry to make and/or break electrical connections. One example of such a connector is a so-called push-back connector. In a push-back type of connector, a cylindrical member, such as a so-called push-back pin, is retained within a cylindrical aperture of a receptacle connector. The push-back pin may be used to mate and/or unmate the connector to a complementary member. Examples of push-back type connectors are shown in U.S. Pat. Nos. 5,695,290, 5,839,107, 5,840,408
