In order to eliminate variation between individuals in a population, and to increase the probability of finding a new species, we have begun doing predatory fieldwork on reefs in Florida's "drowning zone", in the Gulf of Mexico. This fieldwork has yielded several new species of soft corals and sponges. Additionally, we have documented several new species of soft coral in the Florida Keys. Three of these are included in this study, namely, a new species of the genus Scorpaenopsis, a new species of the genus Iridina, and a new species of the genus Pseudothelphusa. All three of these species are collected from sites in the upper

Using this data, I tried to identify the richest sites online. I identified ten of them, with annual revenues of at least $80 million each. I am now looking at the top 100 of the same list. Here is what I've found. 1. Amazon.com. This is a surprising omission. Indeed, on the day I published the main body of my analysis, Amazon was the only website among the top 10 on the list to have experienced a fall in its traffic. 2. EBay. In addition to being the largest online retailer, eBay also claims the highest gross merchandise volume. I'm not sure how much of that business is online vs. edd6d56e20
