Dying Light Save File Fix v1.2 - Follow Me

Aug 23, 2014 Thanks to Jack Daniels, another solution to crashing is to use a different save file. While you are in the menus, change the save file to a different save file (create one or choose one), then try to quit the game (the game should start using the new save file). This may solve the bug. Note: The original save file is preserved (in the same folder with other save file names) and can be used anytime you want. A: I have also experienced this kind of issue, where I would get "The White Wolf has managed to defeat you" after getting really close to victory during the final stages of the game. The best solution I have found for this is to rename the save file in Steam Cloud. When you start up the game you will get the white wolf screen, as it will re-download the save file. The file will then be replaced with the new name. A: This usually happens when you haven't beaten every enemy in the game, and you haven't completed the final mission. The next time you start the game, Steam will create a new save file and give you the message "The White Wolf has managed to defeat you". If you want to play again, choose the save file that is already in your Steam Cloud so you will not get this message. Q: Django trying to override a class derived class So I have a class called ClassA which implements the Setter and a class called ClassB which derives from ClassA. `import setter class ClassA(setter.Setter): pass class ClassB(ClassA): pass` When trying to use it like: `ClassB.my_setter_class.some_setter_method()` I get an `AttributeError: 'ClassA' object has no attribute 'my_setter_class'` I've read the documentation over and over and even considered subclassing it but I'm still unsure how to do it. A: You're missing the parenthesis to indicate that you're calling the method (which doesn't exist for the base class). What you actually want is: `ClassB.my_setter_class.some_setter_method()` That being said, you may have a better solution here. Rather than subclassing,
