Photoshop Elements comes with five tabs or windows: * **Layers**_. This tab contains the Layers panel, which is found on the left side of the window, with layers as shown in Figure 13-2. * **Guides**_. This tab contains the Levels panel, which is found at the top left of the window, and looks at the image's contrast and brightness as a whole. If it's blurry, you can crop or sharpen the image so that it's more focused. Figure 13-1: Create a new window by choosing the new window layout from the main menu. * **Colors**_. Q: Laravel 5.2 Sparcely eager loaded belongsTo relation Hi everyone I have a relation between a Parent and a Child. I like to eager load the Child. I have tried following is: `$child = $parent->child()->with(['childData'=>function($query) { $query->select('T1.id','T1.name'); }]);` `$child->with('childData');` Also I have tried: `$child->with(['childData'=>function($query) { $query->select('T1.id','T1.name'); }]);` `$child->with(['childData'=>'childData']);` I have checked the Laravel Documentation and did go through the laravel 5.2 documentation. Any help would be appreciated. A: If you eager load a child relation you just need the child relation to be loaded with an eager loading query like so: `$parent->with('child');` The with method accepts the name of the class that contains the eager loaded relation like the parent's model name. Update I like to think of it this way, I was using it like a "link", it's just a name that connects the parent and the child. So if you want to eager load the child, you need to tell the parent to eager load the child. You don't need to have a name for it, just this: `$parent->with('child');` And then if you want to eager load something for the child, just use it like so: `$child->with('childData');` where childData is the name of the relation that you have in the child. Q: TeamCity - Testing with multiple configuration files I have a project that has a main config file and an additional config file:
