Oct 25, 2021 Toby Ziegler, who wrote and directed the film Freeway, has a knack for mingling tightly-plotted and absurdist premises with thoughtful themes and a devious sense of humor, evidenced most notably by his breakthrough film Swingers. Now he's taking that sensibility to heart, as he writes and directs the new comedy-drama Big Head from a script by Danny McBride. We've an exclusive first trailer for you, which you can see below. (Jason Bateman is also in the movie, along with Mike O'Malley and Imogen Poots.) Based on Ziegler's own coming-of-age experience, the story follows a 19-year-old who becomes infuriated when he learns that his father (Bateman) has married his hot sorority-sister. There's a lot of underground-tapping and time-travel plot-twists in the trailer, making it seem like a wild, cross between The Blair Witch Project and Groundhog Day with some Black Swan sprinkled in. It's directed by Ziegler, so we have a feeling the visual style will be close to his hand, and the casting is strong with the likes of Bateman and O'Malley. So who's this 19-year-old, though? Read on for Ziegler's first comment on the movie, and then get yourself over to the trailer. Deficiency of leptin, a hormone produced in fat cells that acts on the brain, is associated with obesity, which is already a widespread and worldwide problem. However, leptin administration is a limited treatment for obesity, because its availability is somewhat limited to the amount of fat tissue, which is a site of leptin production. One way of providing leptin to a subject or animal is to introduce into the subject or animal cells that produce leptin, in particular recombinant cells, such as bacterial cells or other eukaryotic cells. However, a problem with the use of recombinant cells is that they are often not fully developed. In particular, some cells may be non-functioning (in a "dead" state), and may not be able to produce or
