When activated by beta-AR in the heart, cardiac ATP-sensitive K+ channels (KATP) open and decrease resting membrane potential and excitability. KATP are also closely linked to L-type Ca2+ channels. Because of the large degree of coupling between these channels, beta-adrenergic regulation of KATP may also alter Ca2+ channel activity. In this review, we discuss recent evidence that beta-AR modulate cardiac KATP, and its impact on L-type Ca2+ channel.A little bit of this and a little bit of that…..
