The development of new photocatalysts as well as a rational and selective in situ activation mode for C-C bond cleavage reaction have been the subject of intense research. We herein described an efficient visible light-induced in situ decarboxylation process for the synthesis of cyclic compounds using chiral SNSHC and oxazoline ligands. With this novel approach, the chiral bicyclo[2.2.1]heptane could be obtained with an enantiomeric excess of up to 94% and good selectivity. At the 2018 Singapore Art Basel, Malaysian artist Siti Nurhaliza, who is a transgender woman, was featured in an interview with The Artist Collective, led by Danish curator Jens Hoffmann. You can read about the conversation between Siti and Hoffmann here (and see some of Siti's works here). However, for those who are less familiar with Siti's work, here's a bit about her: Siti was born as an infant in Malang, Indonesia, after the forced marriage of her mother to her father. She moved to Singapore as an adolescent and pursued painting and ceramics as an avant-garde art form. In 2004, she was discovered by Malaysian producer and songwriter Yusry and began to pursue a career as a singer-songwriter. Her one of her many award winning albums, Riyal-E-Shab is, to date, the highest selling album by any Malaysian female artist. She has also been named Artist of the Year by the World Music Awards in Los Angeles in 2005 and 2006. (Note: It has been brought to my attention that Siti's work does not necessarily reflect her true, transgender identity. I do not know Siti personally, and am, therefore, unable to verify whether or not she is transgender, nor am I a doctor. However, if she is indeed "ambiguous" about her gender, it is important that art's ability to challenge a society's views
