The influence of large anterior mediastinal tumors on the dimension of the atrium of the heart. In the cases of forty-four large anterior mediastinal tumors, intrathoracic pressures were measured in order to decide the functional importance of cardiac atrial enlargement. Because of their different growth rates, three groups of tumors were differentiated: small tumors (less than 3.0 cm), medium-sized tumors (3.1-6.0 cm) and large tumors (more than 6.0 cm). The three groups revealed differences in the functional involvement of the atrium of the heart: in the case of the small and medium-sized tumors, the atrial enlargement was not of functional importance; however, in case of large tumors the atrial enlargement had a significant influence on the intrathoracic pressure, especially at times when the tumor was growing. The correlation found between the tumor size and the functional importance of the atrial enlargement was independent of the tumor localization.Windmills for pumping water are known in the art. In order to account for the varying efficiency of windmills, a number of different windmills are used to pump water. One problem with the use of conventional windmills is that the position of the sails which are attached to the windmill must be adjusted. The sails are attached to the windmill so that they may be rotated about a vertical axis to direct the wind into the path of the sails to turn the blades. The height of the sails must be adjusted to obtain the maximum efficiency of the windmill. The sails are typically mounted to the windmill by a mechanical coupling device and a set of valves for adjusting the height of the sails must be engaged to set the elevation of the sails. This is typically done by a service technician, which is expensive and time consuming. Accordingly, there is a need for a relatively inexpensive method and device to adjust the elevation of the sails of a windmill.Ferrari has launched a public there are no cultural or religious exemptions The man, who gave his name as Philip, claimed he was threatened with a knife and other weapons when he boarded a number 100 train on September 1. The 25-year-old was threatened by two men after he said he was forced to ride in a train car at Rushcutters Bay station. However, Mr Philip told a media conference that three men boarded the train at Lidcombe station, and he decided to follow them. The man said he was repeatedly asked to leave the train by the occupants, but denied he was being physically forced to leave the train. "I didn't feel physically hurt — I mean, I felt sort of ashamed, but not harmed," Mr Philip said. He claimed the men verbally attacked him for supporting Israel and Judaism, before telling him he was "brainwashing the whole of the Islamic world", adding that "all Muslims were going to die". The man said the men put their hands over his mouth, and one of them put a knife to his throat. "I thought that he might kill me, and I was pretty scared. In that moment of need, I thought about saying, 'I just want to go home'," he
