The function runs fine and displays some text from a specified block, but is returning an error. If I run the script from the debugger, the currentSuite and currentBuild variables appear correctly. See below: var currentSuiteId = 0; var currentBuildId = null; var currentSessionId = 0; var currentUserId = 0; var userCompanyId = 0; var userId = 0; How can I access the current building from a Function? var status = myFunction(); var status = myFunction().getMeta().getCode(); var status = myFunction().getMeta().getMessage(); var status = myFunction().getMeta().getName(); var status = myFunction().getMeta().getStatus(); A: Tried this? var building = context.currentItem.getParameters().get('id'); Why Is Zookeeper Sticking Around? There are many reasons why ZooKeeper is sticking around and flourishing as a project. It is perhaps the most well-known enterprise distributed systems tool at this time, and it's full of features and capabilities that make it a great candidate for many people in many different kinds of situations. Evolving technology Zookeeper has certainly benefited from the fact that the technology is constantly evolving. As many other systems have done, Zookeeper has rewritten code, introduced brand new concepts and made it easier to program with new languages like Python and Ruby. The lack of architectural limitations in many areas, including performance
