At least, not until something i...Read On »Naturally Occurring Polycyclic Aromatic Hydrocarbon Contaminated shellfish has been found to contain polycyclic aromatic hydrocarbon (PAH) concentrations at levels much higher than those found in uncontaminated marine fish. The PAH content of these shellfish may be related to the disposal of material from the petroleum and gas industry near their habitats. The large amount of PAH detected is in the form of parent compounds which is in contrast to studies of heavy petroleum refining and gas industry areas where parent compounds are rarely detected. Tuesday, November 12, 2010 Burden or Blessing - The Low Price of Motherhood in Europe Katrin Denninger, who says the title of her article in 'The Guardian' is a little bit tongue-in-cheek, wrote her article while her baby boy, Sydney, was in transit at a Swiss airport and knew she was going to be busy for a long time. I was afraid that this having a baby might be a burden on my career and also maybe on our finances and even our marriage so we took out a life insurance policy with a large sum. I certainly hope I never know what it feels like to have a life insurance policy with a large sum of money because as I read what Katrin shared in her article, I feel so much better and not less burdened with the baby. I had heard from a friend about the restorative benefits of having a baby but it hadn't really clicked with me until I read her article. And, she is not far from the truth about how financial and financial stresses can really make life a major headache. For the record,
