Arrhythmias occur frequently in patients with chronic renal failure. In most cases they are due to ischaemia of the heart muscle caused by local or systemic myocardial hypoxia. Cardiovascular abnormalities may also be secondary to certain drugs or due to electrolyte disorders. Arrhythmias can also occur as a result of denervation of the heart muscle. When arechaemic episodes are discovered early and treated prophylactically, the risk of developing an arrhythmia may be minimized. However, prevention of the development of cardiovascular symptoms is not always possible. This is due to the fact that many patients with chronic renal failure are elderly and in such individuals progressive vascular changes often have their onset. It is therefore more important in such patients that the development of ischaemic episodes be detected as early as possible. In addition, detecting cardiovascular abnormalities as early as possible is important for treatment of patients

Recent studies have revealed a convergence of acoustic features of songs of male birds in populations with different dialects. One potential mechanism for the observed convergence is a frequency-specific effect of male song on the female, as suggested by the "dialect" hypothesis. There are strong indications that frequency-specific effects of male song are mediated by prostaglandins (PGs) acting on the bird's auditory and/or olfactory system. The present study was carried out to determine whether frequency-specific effects of song on female choice behavior are mediated by PGs. Males of a population of great tits (Parus major), previously found to vary significantly in their songs' acoustics, were allowed to sing to females of a population of eastern great tits (Parus major L.). Females were tested for responsiveness towards different spectro-temporal features of the songs. All three groups showed preference for higher frequency songs. However, this effect was significantly less pronounced in the eastern compared to the Baltic great tits. When males of the Baltic population were treated with indomethacin, a blocker of PG synthesis, in order to remove PGs from their songs, the females' responses were no longer dependent on the frequency of the songs. These results indicate that in great tits female responsiveness towards different songs' spectral features is mediated by PGs.[A case of mesenteric hemangiopericytoma associated with mucosal hemorrhage]. A 41-year-old man underwent open partial resection of the transverse colon because of a large intra-mucosal tumor and diagnosed as having a gastrointestinal stromal tumor. The tumor located in the right side of the colon was about 40 mm in diameter and accompanied by multiple submucosal nodules. The mucosa was almost normal. Histologically, the tumor consisted of the proliferation of spindle-shaped cells around the capillaries of the vascular lacunae and intercellular matrix of the mucosa. Immunohistochemical studies showed that tumor cells were positive for CD34, smooth muscle actin and vimentin, and negative for S-100 protein, epithelial membrane antigen, desmin, muscle specific actin and cytokeratin. In the resected specimen, sub

Boxshot / Description Mini review Long ago, in a small town nestled deep in the Italian countryside, sat an animation studio named Gargantoon. Long hours of design and execution became a blur of chaos and over-ambitiousness. A carefree artist named Grubi, one of Gargantoon's most talented and resourceful workers, began to struggle with the stress and frustrations caused by his increasing misadventures with the equipment and fragility of the medium. Grubi was lucky to have a steady job at a famous radio station, Signal 5, which slowly transformed into a game featuring the most popular [Manufacturer]. Over the years, Grubi became obsessed with [Manufacturer], apparently an evil force that controls everything. In his mind, Grubi decided he had to put an end to it once and for all. Eventually he came to the realization that he was locked in a labyrinth that could be solved by escaping, and the command of his own destiny. But first he had to find the exit. Bravo, [Manufacturer] [Player], its time to slay Grubi once and for all. The good news, your skills have been upgraded and you'll be able to use a variety of cool new moves and abilities to play your part in this action classic. The bad news, you'll have to outfit yourself in black armor and experience the full force of [Manufacturer] through the eyes of eight different agents in succession.
