What's new:

Canada's Rocky Mountain section is quite long, with plenty of Rocky Mountains to be explored, but the vast majority of time spent flying out of Okanagan, British Columbia. Continuing to the east, one of the few major cities along US 550 is Medford, Oregon. This town and surrounding area, once a popular tourist destination, has grown a bit grittier over the years as logging and other industries move west. Don't be surprised if you see an A-Team episode here! Okanagan Airport, at C$6,000/mo (minimum), has been a problem airport for many years, but is improving and has daily flights to Seattle-Tacoma, Las Vegas and Portland, OR. At the very north end of the airport, it is a short field to Canada's C$3,500/mo Columbia Basin Airport. Discounts for combined flights with Okanagan in the Okanagan Gateway pass to Okanagan for significantly less than solo. To the south, Canada's $6,000/mo Airport near Pascoe is a bit further away than Okanagan but cheaper, but a better choice for P/F and instructor flights. From Pascoe, Okanagan Airport can be reached in a $2,000 one-way charter. Some discounts can be obtained for an overnight stay at Okanagan Airport, similar to what can be achieved in Key West. Insurance is compulsory for all operators, with at least C$500 of no-fault coverage minimum, and PACT coverage including medical, property damage, and more. All operators are required to carry a C$500,000 for one person EASA medical certificate. Scenery: British Columbia's Rocky Mountains section can be very scenic and a good break from more rural plains, similar to the Canadian prairies. There are lots of lakes, rivers and fishing, however, and nearly all operators need to be licensed for the rivers, with a $2,500 U.S. fishing license, C$49 or more. Anyone doing recreational airport-to-airport flying should consider putting the 700 foot Go 2 Heights Reservoir in Selkirk, on the BC-Canada border, on the pilot's route pass, as a buffer to prevent being maneuvered down by the Chilcotin Radar and Air Defense

The rooms of the game are fairly large and many things have their own room with various modifications. There is a sort of immediate interaction with the environment. If you move a window, we see what's on the other side. If we pick a floor for moving, we can see that there is a secret passage on it. And if we click on one of the items, we can see that it has different modifications in the game. You will be facing problems with the game.
