Kinky hair disease, also known as Menke's kinky hair disease, is a rare X-linked recessive disorder characterized by hypotrichosis, curly and kinky hair. Its clinical manifestations include midface hypoplasia, dentofacial abnormalities, joint instability and mental retardation. The clinical features of Menke's kinky hair disease are very similar to those of tinea capitis. We reported two female patients with Menke's kinky hair disease, who successfully received allogeneic hematopoietic stem cell transplantation from HLA-identical siblings. Patient 1, a six-year-old girl, presented with a history of tinea capitis and yellow hair. She had been treated with T-bet inhibitors to control the disease condition; however, her hair quality and quantity were not improved. Patient 2, a 15-year-old girl, presented with a history of tinea capitis and yellow hair. The hair quality and quantity had been poor even though she had been given treatment with T-bet inhibitors. Both of the patients received transplantation of bone marrow and T-cell-depleted bone marrow from HLA-identical siblings. Engraftment of donor cells was achieved in both patients and their conditions were markedly improved at 12 and 6 months after transplantation, respectively. In conclusion, allogeneic hematopoietic stem cell transplantation is a potential option for both cure and relief of the symptoms in Menke's kinky hair disease patients.
