All-solid-state rechargeable electrochemical devices, such as batteries and supercapacitors, continue to play a vital role in modern energy storage. However, the use of conventional ionic liquid electrolytes is plagued by their high cost, low thermal stability and environmental hazards. We report here the design and synthesis of a unique class of ionic liquids, consisting of a cation that bears a large anion, capable of operating at the solid-liquid and solid-solid electrochemical interfaces.City of Peoria Department of Public Works 2096 N.
