Q: Unit Testing contracts in a simple test I would like to run a test with contracts: `var contract = factory.CreateContract();` and check if the object is not null and of the correct type. From what I've read in the documentation, `CreateContract()` adds the contract's services' and factory service to the object. How do I simulate this and ensure the objects are exactly the same? A: 1) You can't simulate `CreateContract`, since it is provided by the framework, thus you cannot modify it. 2) `Contract` indeed adds some services to the object, but outside of that it just uses the properties of the object. You can use a property to make sure that the type is exactly the one expected. `var contract = factory.CreateContract(newAnotherContract); var object = contract as IDeserialization { var value =... }; Assert.That(object, Is.Not.Null); Assert.That(object.Type, Is.EqualTo(newAnotherContract));` Life as it is, the present moment; the past, as recollected; the future, as anticipated: Three Perspectives. Thursday, April 22, 2014 Stripped The water outside my window appears to be brownish-red, gray, dirty toned and without appeal. It is a dull day with a harsh sun. My house is weathered, a shell of the original home built in 1854. Its peeling paint looks brittle, like a shell that once was the oyster of a soft inlet that evolved into a deep sound but has fallen away. The ocean feels strong with its immense size as shown in its many waves; and it feels heavy with

Prevalence of oral lesions in patients with vulvovaginitis. Sixty-one patients with vulvovaginitis and/or vaginal discharges (32 women, 29 men) were examined for the presence and characteristics of oral lesions. The prevalence of oral lesions in our patients was higher than in the reference population, 3.26 versus 1.1%. The most frequent lesions were candidiasis and pseudomembranous hyperplastic candidiasis, usually confined to the dorsal surface of the tongue and palate. Pseudomembranous hyperplastic candidiasis, Actinomyces israelii, and angular cheilitis were the most common oral Candida infections. The only time the prevalence of oral Candida infections was higher in women than in men was in pregnant women. In men, bacterial infections predominated, while in women the most common infection was Candida. The high prevalence of oral lesions and Candida infections should be considered when evaluating patients with vulvovaginitis.

I drove out to work last night. Not only was there freezing rain, but the steady rain and subzero temperature caused huge traffic jams on I-696. It took me over an hour to get to work, and I didn't arrive until after nine. Thanks metro-Detroit, for being such a great place to work. But this morning, I woke up to a beautiful Saturday morning - sunny, but cold enough to see my breath. With the sun shining, I decided to drive to Decatur and do some Christmas shopping, instead of taking the bus. Today I decided to wear my black leather trench coat with fur – something I don't normally do. But I thought it might look nice on me. So after my coffee, I made my way to Downriver. I used the time-honored Christmas tradition of window shopping. I started off at Old Marshfield Village. I love how the choral music in the church is so loud you can hear it well before you get to the mall. Next, I went to Wal-Mart, where I picked up some wine and some popcorn. After that, I headed for Costco, to load up on gifts for family and friends. Then I popped into Best Buy, to pick up a new plasma TV for the family room. I have
