- The game Puzzle Art: Horses is a relaxing puzzle game designed for the artistic and musical tastes. The aim of the game is to puzzle the cards and draw a beautiful picture. Your goal in the game is to choose the correct puzzle pieces by matching the puzzle pieces together. You can easily find a solution or help from hints. There are six basic cards in the game: Blue Horse Yellow Horse Red Horse Swashbuckler Nature Sun The task of the player is to create the correct puzzle pieces by matching the corresponding cards. The puzzle pieces are similar to the pieces in drawing art. The game is calm, not extremely difficult to calculate, and easy to solve. It is easy to master, but if the player is not accustomed to thinking about puzzles, the game will be a little difficult to solve. What's new in Fatal Evidence: The Missing Collector's Edition:

I'm not too sure, but I have an idea what this might be. Does it ring any bells for you? Heh, heh. Anyways, I'm probably guilty of this, but I thought I'd share anyway (with your permission, of course). Here's what I've got.

Introduction Melody, or as she was know at her village, the Vampire Melody Tones: "Mother!" Melody was born on a dark, moonless night. She was born to the cold, harsh love of her father, and the cold, hard hatred of her mother. Her father was a wandering, mountain-dwelling playboy; her mother was a vampiress, and what she loved more than anything, is to suck the blood of the weak. Never was there a time in Melody's early years that she was not doted on by her father and cruelly ravished by her cold, blood-sucking mother. As any kid would be, Melody loved her parents very much. She also loved bathes and swimming, riding horses, drawing, and most of all, she loved the great outdoors. Melody had an adventurous spirit, she loved the outdoors because it kept her close to nature, and nature was where she saw an abundance of food. Melody was now a very strong, feisty young lady. Her hair was a mass of soft, bright blond, almost like a pale shade of pink (her parents were vervain for fair). As Melody was bewitching her parents to make her popular among all their friends, her true nature was starting to show. She did not like parties, she would not dance, and she hated the way humans would stop, stare at her and then refuse to acknowledge her existence. As soon as she could, Melody would go and hang out by herself, and try to read out loud by the fire's light. Her father loved to live life to the fullest, and the banning of this passion was not something either of her parents cared much about. After all, it was normal for human kind to deny them as their own, but Melody was different, she hated humans. Melody was six the summer of her fifth birthdate, and she was stumbling, limping, and full of spouts of farts. She was also one to get carried away with the day, which would make her mother mad. That particular night, Melody was lively and ran around and around the cottage.
