Support.Perception of the visual field following recovery from homonymous hemianopsia. Several previous studies have shown that patients with complete homonymous hemianopia can detect visual stimuli in the blind hemifield. The present study was carried out to examine the accuracy of visual field detection in patients following recovery from large hemianopic deficits and in a normal control group. Only one patient was able to detect stimuli in the blind hemifield. This patient was the only one to pass the far visual field detection test, but was impaired on the close visual field detection test. The other patients were all impaired on one or both tests. The findings lend further support to the hypothesis that a small amount of preserved hemianopic visual field can underlie good visual performance in the absence of visual input.Trinidad and Tobago's Leader of the Opposition Kamina Johnson Smith (L) looks on as Speaker of the House, Member of Parliament Winston Chedfrey (C) of the People's National Movement and Prime Minister Ralph Gonsalves (R) of the People's National Movement look at the budget in the Parliament House on March 15, 2017.
