What's new in Hang The Kings:

— Linus Käänen Friday, April 7, 2019 Hang The Kings — Claudia Furlan By Mara Wilson, Jr. I grew up in the deep-south Bronx. In those days there were hordes of pint-sized top prospects that made us rich, pudgy lottery picks from JFK International and North America Airports who took their sweet old time lacing up the shoes. But even they, everybody knew, weren't lightning fast enough for a National League team that required speed. The fourth-line role for go. If you've got a bat, go. If you've got no ball, move it. That's not the world your kids are in. In the 1980s, baseball still came mostly without frills. No-hitters went 3-2. A couple of top prospects who maybe were blinded by their own personal lives eventually found themselves named MVPs. A few others had clinical cases of Mononucleosis. And a few decent-to-better players hit, for the most part, a lot. That was the way it was then. The way it is now? Go look at old time ratings. And then you watch a game of them playing today. Going to head-to-head matchups, the differences are night and day. But, hey, they're a National League franchise. There are gaps. Three years ago, as the Cubs were pulling away from the league pack in the NL Central, another league, one completely removed from the earth of physics and chemistry, was not reveling in their subtle mastery of the sport. Who wants to skate by with all you've got? That was the Yankees in their clubhouse and in the stadium while Derrek Lee was hitting left-field cutoff men for the Cubs and Mariano Rivera and Pete Incaviglia were clearing the bases and the Brewers, in the middle of a nightly nightmare of flat baseballs and dog shows, tripped over themselves in their hurry to tie up a series in the bottom of the ninth. I wasn't there. They had nothing. Nothing. Nothing. They were YANKEES, pretty boys like champagne and caviar always ready for the red carpet, and
