SAN ANTONIO – In what has been called the fifth-biggest settlement in history, the city of San Antonio said Friday that it will pay a $2.7 million fine to about 100 victims of sexual assault after it was convicted of hiding a sexual assault and abuse case against a police officer. The city agreed to pay as the result of a class-action lawsuit that was filed in 2014 after the city, a police department, two officers and some city officials were convicted of covering up sexual assaults and abuse accusations against officer Roberto Saenz. Saenz, a San Antonio Police Department officer, was convicted in 2015 and sentenced to 99 years in prison. Prosecutors said at the time that Saenz had a history of sexual misconduct, including more than 15 cases of sexual abuse in which officers were his victims. Saenz was convicted of multiple counts of child pornography and transmitting sexually explicit material to a minor. But the Department of Justice later turned the investigation over to the FBI and only in the past month announced its investigation and the charges. The Associated Press does not typically identify victims of sex crimes, but said there are dozens of women and girls in the country who are willing to talk about being sexually assaulted by Saenz or being exposed to child pornography, knowing that he would never be prosecuted. One woman came forward in a lawsuit but said she had no concrete proof of abuse and that she wanted to keep her name and story anonymous, said Chris Mancha, her lawyer. Mancha and other attorneys have made at least two dozen court appearances on her behalf over the last nine years. Mancha said the woman said she was sexually assaulted by Saenz when she was a teenager, but her parents and boyfriend were pressuring her to forget about it and did not want to pursue it, so she did not tell anyone. "She wanted justice for what happened to her," Mancha said. "And she wanted people to know that she's OK." Mancha said the city has known about the woman's accusations for years, but the investigation has been kept secret as a result of a gag
