The owners of a recently opened dog park are preparing for a difficult battle with the City of Sebastopol over the installation of a controversial skateboard ramp. The skateboard ramp is nearly 200 feet long and measures six feet high. It is meant to help people of all ages participate in roller sports, and has been described as an "in-your-face" device that will increase public safety and attract people of all ages to the new North Park Dog Park. Yet, according to the city, the ramp also will use park land designated for human use. Some of the land, including two grassy amphitheaters, will be unavailable to users. The other property is meant for property owners to have access to the dog park in the adjacent north at McCully Woods. McCully Woods open space plan at top of page The ramp will be suspended from a cable in the middle of the park, and a public safety flag will be hung from it so that public safety personnel can monitor the surfacing, park volunteers, and visitors. Park user assignments will be posted. The park is slated for completion later this month. The city has approved space for two sets of skateboard ramps — one of which will be suspended from the cable, and another designed for beginners to learn skateboarding. Maddy Cable, a volunteer with Recycled Board Skateboard Designs, chose the site based on the area's proximity to other things in the park, such as its shaded location and the need for a good place to park at peak hours. "We chose this area because it's accessible to everyone," Cable said. Cable said she envisions more kids skateboarding on the edges of the paved path that leads up McCully Way to the McCully Woods open space. Currently, kids who participate in outdoor programs play games like football and soccer on the paved path as they make
