screen.Q: PHPUnit asserting exception from exception I want to assert that a function throws an exception: public function __construct() { $this->settings = new Settings;

$this->settings->setGlobal('not_set', 1); }
public function __call($name, $arguments) {
    $setting = new Settings;
    $setting->setGlobal($name, $arguments[0]); $this->settings = $setting;
    return false; }

How to assert that this function throws an exception as I pass $this to it? A: After creating a new object of Settings in the __call method, you can use PHPUnit_Framework_TestCase::getMockBuilder to create a mock instance: $setting = new Settings; $setting->setGlobal('not_set', 'foo'); $mock = $this->getMockBuilder(Settings::class)->disableOriginalConstructor()->getMock(); //... do something else with $setting // This should work:

$this->assertThrowsException();

This will make PHPUnit think that the method did not change, and throw the exception. If you want to check the data your function received, use `$this->getMockBuilder()->enableAutoMocking(false)` instead of the previous line. That will disable the automatic mocking of methods, so that PHPUnit will no longer alter the original object and its methods will behave as in the original PHP code. The mock object will be created using an [Item No.30] Description UNICLR - Additional Londrekia's Color (No.31-40) [Item No.31] This is a nice starting tone. Requires relative warmth in the amplifiers, and a hard-driven enclosure to fit the amp. In older amps, it may only be usable with compression, reverb, or EQ. [Item No.32] Used this as my daily driver tone for a while, then switched to the JJ200T. Maybe. Its a smooth, dark and slightly warm tonality. Warm amp tubes, or warm equalizers, or just warmth from the preamp. Also, it blends well with higher shelving levels, such as the LGV350D. More than enough sustain, and cleans well too. I think I prefer this over the Shuguang Star. Definately a 4. [Item No.33] I don't recommend it. Whats the scoop on this. I think I'll use it with undersized 7N9 tubes. I may change my opinion. Color bleed into the warm tones is heavy, and it sounds funky. Rock guitar may not be its best choice, unless you are in the sweet spot in your amp, and it sounds good, but I don't recommend overstressing it. [Item No.34] [Item No.35] [Item No.36] [Item No.37] [Item No.38] [Item No.39] [Item No.40] Comments Another cool noise color coming from Jon Londrek. Really, he's got lots. The Gamekeeper is all clean (as far as I know), but it almost sounds like its on the edge of manic, though not quite there. Cant help but think that it may be clean...YET Fuzzy. Thats a stretch, but live with it. Anyways, read on... I have been following Jon Londrek a bit over the last couple years, since I've seen his Fuzz Rich recordings. I had never seen or heard him play before. He's now starting to get more press, and this endorsement of mine is not meant as a comparison of his playing, but rather as a token of how a person can taste an amp, seeing his own collection. I've tried his Noise colors

In Greek Mythology, Alexander the Great is the son of a god and a human woman. Alexander started his life as a small boy in the city of Pherae. He gained fame as a heroic fighter during a campaign to free the Greek city of Thebes from the Macedonian army of his father, the Great King Philip. This campaign led to the Battle of Chaeronea in 338 BC. At the Battle of Chaeronea, the Greek armies were led by Philip's most experienced general, Antipater. Under the leadership of Antipater, the Greek coalition, which included most of the city-states of Greece, destroyed the Macedonian phalanx army of Alexander's father, capturing Alexander as a hostage. On his return to Macedon, Alexander was granted the status of a Great King. However, the following year, he organized a campaign against the Attalids of Pergamon in Asia Minor. The Battle of Granicus involved Alexander's Greek and Persian forces. Although the Greek coalition won at the Battle of Granicus, Alexander won a great victory at the Battle of Issus, forcing the Persian King Darius III to flee to the Caspian Sea.

Alexander then led an army on a campaign that took him through Egypt to the Indus River and his ultimate defeat of the Persian Empire. Alexander was not allowed to return to his homeland of Macedonia by the Senate of Athens. Although his soldiers and general officers were given the freedom to settle in their respective home cities, Alexander himself was left isolated from his fellow Greeks in command of a tribal army.

Alexander was murdered by his former close friend and the most powerful Greek of all, Pausanias. In Greek Mythology, Alexander is told by his mother to take his spear and hunt down the Greek hero Heracles. Heracles had gone into the land of the Indians and was presumed to have died there. Medieval Battle: Alexander delivers a unique wargaming experience on PC and Mac. Use the forces of the Peasants, Vikings, Ostermanns, Crusaders, and many other unit types to engage in classic battles.
