The station is north of and on the London to Bedford line. Services operate via Luton Airport Parkway to and via London King's Cross to the Midlands, with additional peak hour services to and, operated by London North Eastern Railway. Northern also operates a peak hour service to Fenchurch Street via Cambridge. History The station was constructed by the Hertford, Hitchin and St Albans Railway (HHS&AR), opened on 1 September 1848 by the London and North Western Railway (LNWR), and built to their standard of housing a booking office. It was originally a part of the Kings Cross and St Pancras Joint Railway between and St Pancras, with the through trains to and from London terminating at Kings Cross. The station building and booking office, built by the LNWR, is in Tudor Gothic style in sandstone. It was extended in 1871, and in 1906 the high pitched roof was replaced by the current Victorian design, according to Baring-Gould, which added a Welsh slate roof and stained glass windows. In 1885 the station was relocated from the junction between the East Coast Main Line (ECML) and the Kings Cross and St Pancras Joint Railway. The new route, through St Albans, made the station on a bypass around town, and the goods yard to the east. With the arrival of the Great Central Main Line (GCML) in 1902, this was made a through station, enabling services to bypass St Albans completely and serve the north of England via Luton. St Albans became a junction when the East Coast Main Line was cut back to St Pancras in
