Q: JavaScript initialization I have written a bot and it generates a random HTML page. The problem that I have is that the bot also gets extra HTML markup and JavaScript from the site that the page was loaded from. So with every instance of the bot for every site it gets different extra markup and JavaScript. How can I deactivate any kind of additional initialization? A: One way to get what you want is to use a combination of module pattern and callback pattern. The module pattern will keep the bots "private" and the callback pattern will ensure that the bots will only execute code after everything else is initialized (e.g., when it's safe to do so). Here's an example: var bot; function createBot() { bot = new Bot(); document.body.appendChild(bot.dom); } function initMyScript() { // do stuff } createBot(); function callback(result) { if (result.length > 0) { initMyScript(); } } bot.run(callback); Tag Archives: microwave pizza I was having a conversation with a close friend about my desire to learn to bake. She told me that after my first attempt, she had asked the baker what was in the recipe. He gave her the name and a brief description. She went to the store, went home and made the same thing again. It did not taste right. She did not know to cook. She did not know it was a baking situation. She had no clue. When I made the same thing, I had no clue, no clue, no clue, no clue and no clue about what to expect. I did not really realize how difficult it is to get it right. And,
