Next> 0 of 5 Pascal Allard/Getty Images It's no secret that many experts around the globe struggle to pick up passes from Kyler Murray. The former quarterback out of Duke is usually too talented to be a quarterback. Murray is an electric athlete with an IQ that is astronomical. He's a perfect fit for the NFL but his size will be a problem, as at just over 5'10", it's hard for him to be a pocket passer. The only way for him to thrive, in my opinion, is to run. Murray is a running quarterback, so he'd be a good fit to work with the Denver Broncos or the Minnesota Vikings. Murray just needs to get his head right, and he'll have an NFL chance to shine. As far as overall NFL quarterbacks, Murray is a little bit like Jared Goff. He's very talented and has the chance to succeed in the NFL. But if he doesn't settle down, his college production doesn't transfer over to the pros. He needs to be more systematic in his approach. It doesn't help that Murray is inconsistent. His game fluctuates every single week. He looks great some weeks, then he looks terrible the next. It's frustrating, because the season is long and there are still a lot of games left. I have five reasons as to why Murray will be selected first overall. Let's dive into the five reasons: Vision-threatening intraocular foreign body. The records of 13 patients who had a vision-threatening intraocular foreign body (IOFB) were reviewed. The most common presentation was sudden loss of vision. Associated lens dislocation was often due to globe penetration. Although an IOFB may be placed in the anterior chamber, that most often occurs during indirect ocular trauma. Prompt removal of the foreign body, particularly the tip, prevents an extended infection and possible extension of retinal detachment to the peripheral retina. The majority of the IOFBs were placed at hospitals and not in a patient's home. IOFBs that are left untreated may cause progressive inflammation, fibrosis and retinal detachment. Finally, an IOFB should be removed before aphakic extraction of the lens in case the IOFB causes intraocular lens dislocation. Moll [CR19]. The national differences in both stage progression and
