Sokoban - The Boxman is the classic box-pushing puzzle game. The objective of each level is simply to push boxes from one location to another. You can only walk, push or drag boxes. There are no walls and no pulling. With this in mind, try to devise the path from one box to another with as little push/drag and as many downward pushes as possible. Press the A key to activate the box pusher and drag the boxes. Click the B key to activate the box pusher and push the boxes down. Use the mouse to push the boxes. About Boxman: The Boxman has been a popular puzzle game on Windows platforms for over 10 years now. Boxman combines random level generation with a unique point system in order to provide a challenging puzzle for both seasoned and novice gamers. The mechanics are all based on one simple concept. Any obstacle in your way is a success! Simply die and the puzzle is over. It's just you, the boxes and the obstacles in your way. It doesn't get more fun than that! About the Author: Pascal N. Michaud (Boxman/Boxman 2/Sokoban/Boxman Boxman) is a Canadian game designer who is renowned for his work with the puzzle game genre. He has designed and written several titles for Microsoft Windows including boxman, Sokoban, and Boxman Boxman. Some of his most notable titles include: Young Cab Driver, TNT, Grave Digger, and Blackjack. He was the editor and game designer of the PC Game Magazine and has been awarded several Game of the Year awards from Strategic Simulations. His company, called Boxman, currently provides online gaming services for both Microsoft Windows and Apple Macintosh platforms.www.boxmaninc.com/index.htm Windows: Boxman v.1.3 is available for Windows PCs from the Boxman website. Skill Like Mountain Biking “Wash car with Wheelbarrow skill is the best outdoor sport for granny.” Besides the way that the video’s narration moved quickly and impatiently from the simple pleasures of washing a car to the more complex issues of carrying water along a bike trail, the preceding car wash demonstrated a simple but effective way to wash a car. The approach to car washing in the video was minimalist with the car simply parked on a level surface and the operator using a point-of-sale system. In the first two minutes or so, the video made explicit that it was the car’s owner who had to be on-board for the car to be properly washed, as the car itself was essentially cleaned as a result of the owner’s involvement. In the third minute, the content moved from washing a car to properly washing a car, and this segment involved the skill of climbing into the interior of the car and washing the door handles. The purpose of the demonstration was to demonstrate how those simple actions helped to create a more comprehensive washing of the car. However, it was made explicit at the very end of the video that the owner would be responsible for the cleaning of the passenger seat, door handles, and trunk: “Sit and Wash.” Another application of the washing car with wheelbarrow as it shows up again in this video is to do it yourself, and the approach here involves water being diverted around the car using sponge hammers or ramps to make it easier to climb into the car and wash the door handles. Then the visitor who already set up the splash tank with water slides out of the car, which is much easier than climbing in. As noted in the video, this is an ideal approach for skills techniques, for the barriers are lowered by the audience and the actor. The first time it happened, the cyclist was fairly easy to do because the audience didn’t have to worry about him or her falling over the sharp rebar that has been placed in the middle. Over time, the audience will become more willing to help the actor and climb through the razor sharp stub. It also opens the door for the “paint blaster” that has been introduced. This is another example of how the individual components of a skill are used within the context of the whole skill. The aim here is to demonstrate that the door handles are properly and thoroughly washed, and that their owner should be responsible for cleaning the
