After the cleaning process, a gaseous HMDS molecule remains at the surface as a gas, whereas surface bound silanols produced by the reaction between the silica surface and the HMDS molecule can be hydrolyzed in aqueous solution. EP 0 846 003 B1 discloses a method of modifying the properties of silica used in carrier materials in liquid chromatography (LC) columns. A silica surface is modified by treating the silica with a mixture of water and an alkylhydroxyalkylamine, wherein the average hydroxy value is between 0.3 and 0.7. U.S. Pat. No. 5,938,890 discloses a process for removing silanol groups from a silica surface, which is conducted by contacting a silica surface with a mixture of water and an alkylamine having at least eight carbon atoms, wherein the average amine value is between 0.5 and 0.7. According to the reference, the process results in a reduction of the silanol content from 12 nmol/m² to less than 1.0 nmol/m². U.S. Pat. No. 6,521,691
