: Supersonic Ace of Space: Supersonic is a hot-air balloon ride simulation video game developed by Thunder Lab Studios and published by Warner Bros.

Interactive Entertainment for the Wii console, Game Boy Advance, Nintendo DS, and PlayStation Portable. Gameplay

Ace of Space: Supersonic is a hot-air balloon ride simulation video game.

Players are shrunk onto a short passenger tube to take advantage of the flight of a hot air balloon. The balloon carries up to six passengers controlled by the player, each using different control techniques. Ace of Space:

Supersonic has two modes of play:

tourist mode, where the player acts as an assistant for a balloonist, and professional mode, where the player goes as the balloonist. The balloonist or pilot controls the balloon's direction of travel, all flight controls, and the orientation of the passenger tube that the players ride on. The passenger tube is used to move around the landscape by flying quickly between certain points that are randomly generated. This mode also allows the player to respawn if they get hit by a curve or a land. Piloting the balloon involves the following: 1.

Freezing and (if you have) moving the balloon's landing spot; 2. Steering the balloon; 3. Control a flying passenger that is "hopping" on the passenger tube; and 4. Finding the floating free-flying passenger again. Stopping to regain flight control first requires the player to compensate by compensating their next action. When players do not hold in the proper angle they have the passengers float away towards the horizon. Recovering the floating passenger is similar to Spot the Ball; the floating passenger can be either near or far, if he is far the next action will require high precision. A possible cursor is provided to assist with the controls. To purchase a balloon, players must first find one that is available for sale by clicking on a balloon. Then players must find a balloonist to rent the balloon from. After the balloonist is located they must sign a contract and pay various fees. On the way the balloonist will trade with other balloonists to find the cheapest route. When players become weary of the traffic the balloonist will hover and let the players continue on their way. At any point players can pull up a radar which will display warnings. Plot Ace of Space: Supersonic takes place after a fourth World War and follows the life of a balloonist named Mark Harris who after
