.For a man like Mario Batali, it's always the details that make all the difference. That's why he and his crew of culinary wizards went the extra mile in preparing 200 dozen Farm Fresh eggs for an event he was hosting on the farm he owns in Connecticut. Batali is the chef at Italian restaurant Eataly, which will host a pop-up called "Eataly Patios" on the premises next summer. And when it came time to create a menu for the menu, Batali discovered a secret weapon: chicken. "It was one of the first dishes I made when I was an apprentice, when I worked at my first restaurant in Italy," Batali told the New York Post. "It's a very traditional dish. But it was something my mentor, a long-time restaurateur, used to serve to his friends and he'd never given me credit for it. It's the kind of dish you learn when you are young and feel that things are being denied you." When he took the dish to Eataly for an event last year, he found himself happily surprised by how it was received. "It was a big hit and we agreed that next year we should bring the chicken eggs and bring the dish over to the United States," Batali said. Now, they're back and Batali has prepared a killer egg dish that has you almost wishing that you were in Italy, sipping a nice glass of wine and enjoying the meal with someone special. To make this dish, Batali needed just four simple things: 1. Farm Fresh Eggs 2. Grapeseed Oil, Eggplant, and Extra-Virgin Olive Oil 3. Asparagus and Parmesan Shavings 4. Garlic Sautéed Baby Potatoes First, he made a batch of delicious pan-fried potatoes that are seasoned with olive oil and garlic. Next, he boiled the eggs in a flavorful stock made from simmering some chicken bones, root vegetables, carrots, and onions in water for a few hours. When the eggs are ready to eat, Batali served them to guests with his version of spaghetti and meatballs, sautéed baby potatoes and two types of sauces: one was made from the stock used to cook the eggs and the other was made from the same stock, adding extra fresh garlic and parsley.
