I'll return to say a little more about this in the comments section. A: One thing that's probably worth mentioning right away is that this version of iTunes seems to be still operating under Win98SE, which supports MP3 files up to 64kbps. I.E., the basic MP3 encoder is still used, even though lossless FLAC is available. You could try dropping the file in and seeing if it just opens normally without complaint. If it doesn't, you can tell iTunes to use the higher bitrate encoder by right clicking the file in question and selecting Properties. You'll see a tab labeled Advanced. There should be an option in the Quality setting to chose a different bitrate. A: The AVC lossless codec is now in iTunes 11.0 (Mac) and iTunes 11.0 (PC). It is enabled in Preferences > Advanced > MP3 Encoder. Fast and sensitive screening of Cdc25A-overexpressing MCF7 cells by the sensor of protein phosphatase 2A. Sensitive and fast screening of a proteome is a powerful tool to detect and identify unknown pharmacological targets, as well as a high-throughput tool to test compound libraries for a significant biological target. To cope with the demand to detect a broad range of proteins or protein kinases, a biosensor based on the protein phosphatase 2A (PP2A) was developed for fast and efficient screening of MCF7 breast cancer cells. A human PP2A core enzyme (core complex) was generated by bacterially expressed GST-tagged catalytic subunit and His-tagged regulatory subunit of PP2A. The core complex is activated by immobilization on Ni(2+)-nitrilotriacetic acid (NTA) through its N-terminal His-tag. The substrate of PP2A, a green fluorescent protein fused with an N-terminal MDYKTDDSFPSVDLSPSTGERDINLTQKISQSSVEDR peptide, can be labeled with a fluorescent probe Bodipy FL and then directly immobilized on the Ni(2+)-NTA-activated core
