film in Tamil language. The Hindi dubbed version of the film is titled Velaiilla Pattadhari with new title and characters. Eyes-open longer in REM sleep than wakefulness in healthy subjects.

It is generally accepted that eyes-open during sleep is linked to responses that make it more difficult for the subject to properly perform the task at hand, although the nature of this vigilance decrement is not yet known. We measured both the time spent awake, eyes closed (wc), and eyes open (we), and the number of awakenings in 29 healthy subjects while they were in REM sleep and wakefulness (NREM2). Contrary to many hypotheses, we found that we during REM sleep was significantly longer than during wakefulness. In addition, when REM sleep was separated into REM1 and REM2 stages, we found that during REM2 was also longer than during wakefulness. In contrast, the time that subjects were awake did not differ significantly between REM sleep and wakefulness, nor did we find a difference between REM1 and REM2. The number of awakenings also did not differ significantly between REM sleep and wakefulness, nor between REM1 and REM2. These findings suggest that eyes-open during REM sleep in healthy subjects is not a manifestation of attentional difficulties, but rather reflects increased arousal in the absence of external stimuli. The findings also indicate that the process of awakening from REM sleep takes place mainly during REM2.Q: Is the direct proof of Fermat's Last Theorem known?

The standard proof of the Fermat's Last Theorem begins with the special case when the number p is a prime with $p^2 \equiv 1 \pmod{6}$; then we can find a solution to $x^2 + y^2 = z^2$. Now the special case is of a lot of interest, and a lot of work has been spent trying to find solutions for these. But it seems to me that no one has actually found a proof that the overall statement is true using a direct argument. I want
