NEW YORK - More than 400 people rallied on the steps of New York City Hall, calling for the decriminalization of sex work, as part of an action on Thursday with a larger purpose of ending the criminalization of all sex workers. “Sex work is work. Like any other job, sex workers should be able to work safely,” said retired public-school teacher Kerry Dooley, at the rally. “To be a sex worker should not be dangerous.” The crowd was joined by members of New York’s LGBT community, who came out in support of decriminalizing sex work, and often performed during the rally as sex workers who want to demonstrate “a safety net for our work.” “So many of us are homeless people,” said prostitute

Kiri Ballard. “It makes it hard to pay rent, let alone see our family. And when the police and officials raid our houses, they tear our families apart.” Prostitution and related forms of sex work have been criminalized in the United States since the 19th century, resulting in restrictions such as the Norton SystemWorks Description: Norton SystemWorks has a built-in system scanner: blocks ransomware from entering your system before it does any damage. Ransomware is a fast-spreading malicious software that encrypts files on your computer and holds them for ransom, trying to extort money from you. And no matter how often you try to remove ransomware, it keeps making copies of itself in other files and folders. Now you can take advantage of Norton SystemWorks' scanner to quickly delete ransomware infections and prevent them from infecting other files or folders. The advantage is that if you are NOT interested in deleting certain files, you can simply select those that you do not wish to delete, and they will stay intact while you scan your files.
