Find the same volume and balance at Sonic!Get your ENTIRELY NEW head and ear phone set for just $79 at Sonic!The Sony ® XBA™ Headphones are specifically designed to maximize audio qualityâ□¢, delivering great sound with bass and treble balance, clarity, and fullness, the ideal solution for anyone who is already a fan of these high quality Sony headphones. After the Razor's Edge upgrade, it was way too loud. I stopped using it as a daily driver. I figured it was just my setup. Next, I started to notice a slow decline in the audio quality when listened to via the speaker. After talking to retailers, I've found out that there's a piece of software called "CalMAN" that adjusts the volume of the speakers. By default, it's set to the maximum setting. This causes all the audio to be overcompensated, making everything sound too loud. The volume levels are not all that high, it only affects the audio playing through the Razor's Edge's speakers. The audio is still amazing with this software, but it's still too loud, and it can only be adjusted in a one-at-a-time per-app basis. I spoke to Chad, the only tech that knows how to adjust the CalMAN volume settings. He told me that he had the CalMAN volume adjustment all the way up, and that this is normal.Q: Conditional nested if statement Okay, I am still learning code and still having issues with something that I have been doing for a while. I want to make sure I do this right. I have a table and for each row in that table I need to create a row for each button that was a selected. If the rows look and number like this: Button 1 |1 |2 |3 Button 2 |4 |5 |6 Button 3 |7 |8 |9 etc... I need to make the row loop through a list of values for each button that was selected then make the row selected.
