Ivona pt br voice ricardo brazilian portuguese 22khzEvaluation of dose adaptation in patients with small renal masses treated with stereotactic body radiotherapy and low-dose rate brachytherapy. To compare the efficacy of primary exclusive stereotactic body radiotherapy (SBRT) versus SBRT with low-dose rate (LDR) brachytherapy for the treatment of small renal masses. Thirty-six consecutive patients treated with curative intent between

June 2003 and September 2007 were analyzed. The median follow-up was 30 months. Patients received primary SBRT monotherapy for masses 1 to 4 cm in greatest dimension. The prescription doses were 15 to 18 Gy in 3 fractions for SBRT alone and SBRT with LDR brachytherapy. Kaplan-Meier analysis and log-rank comparisons were performed to assess local control, disease-specific survival, and distant metastasis-free survival rates. Twenty-five patients underwent SBRT monotherapy and 11 patients received SBRT with LDR brachytherapy for gross or internal gross disease. Comparison between the exclusive SBRT and SBRT with LDR brachytherapy groups showed no significant difference in local control, disease-specific survival, or distant metastasis-free survival rates. Of the 11 patients who received SBRT with LDR brachytherapy, none of the previously irradiated tumor bed sites recurred. In comparison, SBRT resulted in greater rates of grade 3-4 acute and late toxicity, freedom from grade 3-4 and grade 1-2 late toxicity was statistically greater in patients treated with SBRT alone. Patients who received primary curative-intent SBRT monotherapy were not found to have significantly higher local control, disease-specific survival, or distant metastasis-free survival rates compared with patients receiving primary curative-intent SBRT with LDR brachytherapy. Patients who received SBRT with LDR brachytherapy showed a lower rate of freedom from grade 3-4 and grade 1-2 late toxicity compared with those receiving SBRT alone.Q: How do I remove a leader icon after clicking on a
