Melanocytic lesions are an important group of diagnostic challenges that require careful identification and diagnosis. Pathologists often encounter diagnostic difficulties in distinguishing benign from malignant melanocytic proliferations, but the identification and classification of the most important cutaneous neoplasms are among the most difficult areas of diagnostic practice. While histologic features and clinical findings provide a useful guide to the diagnosis, the integration of these features with a complete knowledge of melanocyte development and melanocytic disorders is essential to the pathologist. There is a need to have a better understanding of the proliferative activity of melanocytes, the factors that regulate melanocyte proliferation, the development of melanocyte malignancies, and the development of melanomas.
