What's new in Groove Runner:

The Groove Runner is a jazz album by vibraphonist/singer Ruth Brown, released in 1957. It was a jazz/pop crossover record that capitalized on the success of "Stay". She also co-wrote "Look" with writer/producer Nick Venet. Ruth Brown would again team with Venet for her 1958 album "Ruthless" and then her 1960 album "The Ruth. Despite her success, the record charts were sparse; the album peaked at #112 on Billboards pop charts, her highest charting record. Groove Runner features two other notable tracks: the title track and "Baby Man", both composed by blues legend Bo Diddley. "Groove Runner" was originally recorded as "Baby Man," with the title and title chorus replaced with an instrumental version of the song. Bo Diddley toured with her in the summer of 1957 where he worked with Brown on a new composition she wanted him to try out for her. He has recalled working with her in various interviews. "Baby Man" became a hit, peaking at #11 on Billboard's charts. Brown and Diddley were purportedly introduced by Diddley's guitar technician Mervin Cansler, who was a friend of Brown's drummer Marty Paich. The album was released by Bethlehem Records (BES 10011) in the UK and August 1958 by Bethlehem's Sire subsidiary. The album was reissued in Germany in the 1980s by Südwest Musikverlag, where it was retitled "Für die Groove Runner". In 1990, a compact disc featuring the original US release track listing, vinyl album, and 1964 live album Ruth Brown & Gerry Mulligan performed by Atlantic Records featuring Brown, Mulligan, Lee Konitz, Randy Weston, Gene Wright and Jackie McLean was issued by the BMG label. In 2012, the album was reissued by BMG as part of its entire music catalog on the series of critically acclaimed The Original Album Series box set releases. Reception Writing for AllMusic, critic Stewart Mason said, "Ruth Brown has a pretty unique voice and her arrangements are excellent. As a nice complement to all this, [her] label delivers another good melodic ballad, complete with nifty tunes, tricky performances and lovingly constructed arrangements." Upon its reissue the album was hailed by Chitfullo Records as "The Best in Ruth Brown's Career." Critics also indicated that the album
