The majority of the features discussed in this chapter are available in Photoshop Elements, and it may be the program you actually need for common-level image editing. If you are working with full-resolution images or large projects, and you need most of the tools covered in this chapter, Photoshop is the program you should use. Photoshop has a greater capacity than Elements, and it is capable of doing everything presented here. However, Photoshop is a far more complex program and you must invest the time to understand Photoshop's nuances. If you already have Elements, it's less work to purchase Photoshop, and you'll save a lot of time. If you don't have any image-editing software, you can create your first image in Elements. Figure 10-1. An image loaded into Photoshop. Figure 10-2. The Layers palette in Photoshop. The Layers palette contains all the files, folders, and layers used in your image. Figure 10-3. This image has a background layer, a layer with a layer mask, a layer with a clipping mask, and one or more selection layers. Figures 10-1 and 10-2 show an image displayed in Photoshop. Figure 10-3 shows some of the layers in the Layers palette. Each layer is contained in a folder. Layers contain all the tools and parts of the image that you want to work on, and then each layer is a completely individual document that contains all the same tools. Because layers are documents with different tools that you can apply or remove, you can use the software in different ways. You can work in layers and apply and remove tools, layers, and selections without moving your document, or you can reposition the layers, move the document, and work on each layer independently.

Why should you learn Photoshop? When you learn Photoshop, you can produce high quality images by adding new elements to your files, easily creating a new slide deck, or design your website with a new web page layout. The world of online photography is growing by the minute and developers like yourself have a real opportunity to capitalise on this while retaining your creative edge. Furthermore, knowing Photoshop will help you learn other skills like retouching, digital painting and compositing in Fusion. In the following sections, we'll go through three reasons why you should learn Photoshop for your graphic design and photography work. Reason 1 – Photoshop Equals Flexibility You may not be a seasoned graphic designer or photographer but maybe you are. The truth is there is only so much you can accomplish using free or inexpensive alternatives. In that case, it's true that you could continue to use those options. However, if you're serious about your work, there is a limit to what you can do without learning Photoshop. Photoshop is used everywhere from a busy newspaper in Africa to graphic design firms in the USA. Anyone can use Photoshop – from a student looking to get their first job to a designer looking to work in the media industry. Whether you are a photographer or graphic designer, you will benefit by being able to use the software effectively to create and manipulate images on a day-to-day basis. It also increases your flexibility, meaning you are able to work at a faster pace, and there are less limitations on the type of work you can do. Reason 2 – It's a Part of Everyday Life Learning Photoshop will equip you with the tools that you need for daily life. This is not to say that Photoshop will help you decide whether to buy a house or have a baby. However, it will equip you to take care of your own finances better so that you can deal with these issues when they happen. When you are learning, you can teach yourself basic Photoshop skills. For example, you can create a profile image, determine the size of text and learn how to control the size of an object. Photoshop is readily available and comes bundled with most computers, or you can get it as a standalone program. It's also free to download and use. The original Adobe Photoshop is a perfect starting place as a first computer-based

Devon Kehoe, the convicted drifter who helped carry out the 9/11 attacks in New York City, has been sentenced to 3,709 years in prison, sentencing was delayed Tuesday at his sentencing for the second time this month. Kehoe was sentenced to 18 additional years after the conviction was vacated in March due to insufficient evidence. "There is a reason it's taken so long. The trial gave us the foundation for the government's case," said Assistant US Attorney Michael Cohen. Kehoe has been accused of running a sophisticated Al Qaeda-linked terrorist plot in which he is alleged to have planned to destroy the Brooklyn Bridge, the George Washington Bridge, the Lincoln Tunnel, all three of the Brooklyn-Queens Expressway tunnels and the tunnel under the Hudson River. He was originally charged with seven counts of terrorism, although the indictment was heavily redacted prior to his trial. Kehoe was convicted on 12 counts of terrorism-related charges, including 11 counts of conspiracy to destroy federal buildings and a bridge. The judge in the case sentenced Kehoe to 3,709 years for the nine terrorism charges and 21 years for his weapons charge. Kehoe's defense team filed a motion requesting to overturn his conviction Monday. The judge has yet to make a decision. The trial, which was expected to last over a month, was being held in the Brooklyn Federal Courthouse. Defense team questioned the legitimacy of the government's case. "This is an old public trial. In fact, the public trial that we have been able to piece together is only 16% of this case as indicted by the prosecution," said defense attorney Louis Ali. "This entire trial was a farce." "We know that the government's theory was to use Al Qaeda as the boogeyman," said Ali. Kehoe, who admitted to working on the plot, is a former Connecticut transit system police officer. The government was not arguing that Kehoe "intentionally" attempted to destroy a specific target, instead prosecutors argued that an aircraft would have been used to carry out the attacks. According to prosecutors, Kehoe did not need to know what targets were to be destroyed. "He had a plan. It involved taking people out," said prosecutor Evan Turgeon. At least three people were arrested for assisting with the plot. One of the individuals has pleaded guilty, while the other two have not yet entered

Business Opportunities in Upcoming Holidays One of the most important features of each milestone or holiday in life is about business. In fact, these special days can make huge amounts of profit for any business. You can contact any service provider to avail their services. There are many companies that offer product and services for specific days like 15th Feb, 16th Mar, 13th Apr, 14th May etc. Some of the good days that are used in business are Valentine's Day, Easter, Mother's Day, Father's Day and Birthday. As many companies make their annual activities and marketing strategies on specific days so it would be a good idea to take advantage from it. Valentine's Day: It is celebrated on the 14th of February. The day is used in marketing to make more profit from the special events and some types of business activities. The most common activities on the day are giving chocolate or gift, clicking a picture of your loved ones, making cards or even creating a special card with a message to your best friends. This can be a perfect day to promote anything like marketing or products that are related to love or romance or even if you want to make some gifts for your loved ones. Easter: It is celebrated on the Sunday after the week of Good Friday. It is the primary reason for Easter Monday being a popular time to work or get things done. There are more chances of people selling products and services during this holiday. Another reason for having this date as a holiday is the easiness to take family and friends to watch the Easter ritual. Easter eggs, Easter sundays, many types of gifts, and Easter weekend are some of the things that are distributed during this time. You can also buy and distribute Easter themed gifts. Mother's Day: It is celebrated on the second Sunday in May. The reason behind the celebration is to celebrate the life of mothers. The main activity that is performed on this day is honouring mothers through various gifts. You can buy all kinds of gifts like flowers, chocolates, cakes, clothes, jewelry, furniture, accessories and many other things. You can also take a family walk on Mother's Day or make homemade ornaments to decorate your house with. Father's Day: This is celebrated on the third Sunday in June. The tradition of the Father's Day is based on the memory of the first Father's Day. It
