Q: Parallel asynchronous "git fetch"s in Golang Assume there are three servers, Foo, Bar and Baz. I have a repository on all three servers. I want to fetch from Foo to Bar and Bar to Baz. I.e. I want to schedule/perform some actions in a way that each fetch is happening in parallel. Right now the only way I see to solve this is by scheduling three goroutines with time.After. But I'd like to have something elegant and idiomatic as possible. A: Go's semaphores work great for what you're doing. The first example uses a single semaphore, but you could also use a semaphore per remote; each semaphore controlling a goroutine that will fetch from that remote and print the result. package main import ("fmt" "time") type FetchResult struct { Loc string Remote string Err error } func fetch(rep string) FetchResult { n := make(chan *FetchResult) go func() { defer close(n) result :=

A: I do not know if this program is still on the market. But I have succesfully cracked it, though I was only able to access the first 130k, and the decryption key. There are 10 keys, and 2 passwords, but they are not stored in plain text. The cracked key, which is all I could get access to, is this: 4a1254378fe5fe8cd67c7d58023c58e8bdbcf6ff6e2e948d3cc95fd4a7f2b16e44df Probably it is not what you want since it is not the original one. Now I decided to share it, if someone finds it useful. Characterization of an outlier population of California ground squirrels infected with Borrelia burgdorferi, the vector of Lyme disease. Previous work has shown that ground squirrels from outlying areas of California are resistant to the Lyme disease bacterium Borrelia burgdorferi. The present study analyzes the California outlier population for genetic and ecological characteristics and provides evidence that (i) the outlier population is genetically distinct from other California ground squirrel populations, (ii) the outlier population has more inbreeding than expected, and (iii) the outlier population is almost completely reproductively isolated from other California populations. Genetic and ecological analyses were used to assess the status of the outlier population for B. burgdorferi infection. Skin samples were collected for antibody studies from 454 captured ground squirrels from outlying and random locations in central, north, and southern California. The frequencies of B. burgdorferi infection in the outlier population were uniformly low (mean=3.9%), significantly lower than other California populations (mean=14.9%). These results suggest that the outlier population represents an extreme case of polymorphism or selection, and that the low prevalence of B. burgdorferi infection is probably related to ecological factors. Populations of California ground squirrels that are genetically distinct and that reproduce at local scales may be important for studying the factors that affect B. burgdorferi persistence and distribution.Tooned Hours Tooned Hours is a British indie rock band from London.
