Ecological consequences of escalating rates of infection with Haemophilus influenzae type b (Hib) among young children. We used a model that incorporated dose response, competition, and host immunity to examine the ecology of escalating Hib disease. We assumed that direct and cross-immunity were the sole mechanisms of control at low doses, and they both declined at higher doses. In addition, even though adults have been found to be more susceptible to Hib disease than children, we assumed that the inverse was true for Hib in children. A computer model with a dose-response and competition structure was used to estimate the steady state prevalence of Hib that would result if the rate of vaccine coverage increased between a minimum of 10 percent and a maximum of 90 percent in children under age 5 years. Both the equilibrium prevalence and the total number of cases of Hib disease decreased with increasing vaccine coverage, and the relationship was especially strong for both equilibrium prevalence and cases for doses above 50 percent ($R^2 = 0.91$ for prevalence and 0.97 for cases). Increases in vaccine coverage had the greatest impact at lower vaccine doses, and for doses below 50 percent,

A passionate team behind the game, Alíax Games' Meinel & Partners always strived for excellence in their video game development. Soon after releasing the game, they have already expanded the team, but not yet found enough developers to complete the project yet. Therefore, they have turned towards gamers, to get additional feedback on the game to make it perfect. • Game funding and development The game is currently in the planning stages (8/2017). At first, Alíax Games. already sold copies on Amazon under third party name 'Diversions'. The sales made through this channel are being used to fund the porting of the game from Windows into other platforms. Now Alíax Games is raising funds from the community to bring Meinel & Partners. Backers pledging support for this will get an original art piece made specifically for this game. Therefore, if we reach the Minimum Project Goal, we'll receive the art, which would otherwise not be offered to backers.

PS4 Version: About the game: Do not expect a clear story with this game. It's a game about observing and interacting. As an amateur photographer who has stopped making sense of the world, you find yourself strolling through the quiet town of Granada, Spain. On a whim, you choose to make your way to the beach. The beach is quiet; the tide is out, but you look to the water and see something most people do not see. Something about the ocean is different this evening, as it is in the moments before dusk.
