Modulation of embryonic blood flow by central circulatory disturbance: a theoretical model of anorectal malformation. The pathogenesis of anorectal malformation (ARM) has been suggested to involve disturbances in both embryonic vascular development and an abnormal presomitic signaling pathway. However, the mechanisms underlying the abnormal embryonic vascular development are unknown. To date, there is no theoretical model to help understand the relationship between cerebral circulatory disturbance (CCD) and anorectal malformation (ARM). In this study, we developed a theoretical model to understand how CCD affects ARM. The CCD is divided into two types: intracranial CCD (ICCD) and intra-abdominal CCD (

While there is no good answer to this question, there are several possible answers. One is that NASA scientists are concerned that the internet could self implode someday (a la Y2K) - if computers could not reach agreement on a date, or limit a time out to one hour, it would make traffic impossible across the entire world for a year. So NASA is doing research on this. Another is that they are concerned that the U.S. might try some sort of last ditch effort at going to war with China or Russia, if the U.S. leaders could not get their own people to agree on the date for the attack. The third one is that these researches are simply a way of distracting the general public from the real issues of "War", which could affect the average computer user in their daily lives. What seems likely is that NASA will study the human aspect of computer communications, and try to find ways to improve communication systems, so that when computers suddenly go haywire, the human factor can be considered. If NASA really wanted to be serious they should be planning for the day that humans are no longer needed, or if the technology fails. "The
