In this study, we evaluated the effect of a surgical safety checklist on perioperative outcome in patients undergoing laparoscopic colorectal resection for colorectal cancer. A surgical safety checklist for laparoscopic colorectal resections that includes items for standardization of preoperative time, theatre-time, postoperative care, and incisional care is assessed. Primary outcomes are postoperative complications, time to first flatus, and time to first diet. Secondary outcomes are length of stay, and unscheduled readmissions/visits. We hypothesize that the introduction of a surgical safety checklist will reduce complication rates and lead to shorter hospital stay and less unscheduled readmissions. In total, 140 patients undergoing laparoscopic colorectal resection for colorectal cancer are to be included in this study. Patients will be randomized in two groups with a 1:1 allocation ratio to an intervention group that will receive a surgical safety checklist (Blue Protocol) and to a control group that will receive standard operating procedures only. The inclusion of the intervention will start on August 21, 2015, and the intervention is performed until the end of August 2016. Study results will be communicated by September 1, 2016. This trial is registered with the Netherlands Trial Register (NTR4939). With this study we will gather information to support surgeons to implement a standardized perioperative checklist as the strategy to improve perioperative outcome.Q: Append array of bytes in C# I am converting MP3 files from.wav to.mp3.
